Justice and Law is an interdepartmental program designed to give students a background in and framework for understanding the ways that philosophers, government officials, and others think about justice, and the related ways in which societies marshal power and implement law. This liberal arts program provides tools for thinking critically and arguing about what justice might entail, how it works in practice, and how rules, aspirations, laws, and norms evolve over time and in different parts of the world.

THE CONCENTRATION
The concentration in Justice and Law consists of six courses: an interdisciplinary introductory course, four electives taken from at least two departments, and a senior seminar. Electives are listed below. Students may declare program concentrations at any point during their academic careers.

Four Electives
Four elective courses are required to complete a concentration in Justice and Law. These courses must be taken from at least two departments. Other courses, not listed below, may be approved by the Chair.

JLST 101(F) Introduction to Justice and Law
This course will examine all aspects of America's legal system, including its historical and constitutional underpinnings; the processes of resolving disputes, e.g., trials, plea-bargaining, and civil settlement; and the diverse roles of participants in the system, e.g., judges, jurors, legislators, and law schools. The course will emphasize the deeply interdisciplinary nature of law, probing the law's intersections with politics, history, economics, psychology, philosophy, sociology, science, and religion.

JLST 250T Trials
Humans are social creatures. In organized societies, when conflicts arise, people rely on the law and, within the law, on trials to sort out competing claims and assign proper consequences. “Trials” include other tests such as the trial of battle, experimental trials, trials to qualify for athletic finals, and probationary periods. At its core, then, a trial is a way to test the veracity or quality of some person or thing. This tutorial traces the application and various meanings of trials, focusing on three themes: trials as a test of personal character; trials as a way of knowing; and trials as social institutions designed to protect the social order by offering justice.

JLST 376(F) Sex, Gender, and the Law in U.S. History (D)
Crosslistings: HIST 376/WGSS 376/JLST 376
This course explores how the law in America has defined and regulated gender and sexuality. We will evaluate how the law has dictated different roles for men and women, how sexual acts have been designated as legal or illegal, and the ways that race, class, and nationality have complicated the definition and regulation of gender and sexuality. We will examine how assumptions about gender and sexuality have informed the development of American law, contested interpretations of the Constitution, and the changing meanings of citizenship; We will consider how seemingly gender neutral laws have yielded varied effects for men and women across race and class divides, challenging some differences while naturalizing others. Finally, we will examine the power and shortcomings of appeals to formal legal equality waged by diverse groups and individuals. Throughout the course, we will consider the various methodologies and approaches of the interdisciplinary field of legal history. Topics to be covered will include the Constitution, slavery, marriage, divorce, custody, inheritance, immigration, sexual violence, reproduction, abortion, privacy, suffrage, jury duty, work, and military service.

JLST 401(S) The Unwritten Constitution
"The eight thousand words of America's written constitution only begin to map out the basic ground rules that actually govern our land." So begins Akhil Amar's book \textit{The Unwritten Constitution}. Amar recasts the debate over whether America has a "living Constitution." That debate usually revolves around whether change in constitutional meaning requires resort to the formal amendment process or can be achieved through judicial interpretation. Amar supports a living Constitution, but proposes something far-reaching: history itself effectively amends the Constitution. Thus, for example, he argues that Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech, and precedents set by George Washington, not to mention the daily activities and assumptions of ordinary Americans, have become constitutional subtext which must be taken into account by judges and anyone else (i.e., politicians and citizens) interpreting the Constitution. Is that notion convincing? Preposterous? A healthy way of understanding the inevitable intersection of law, history, and politics? A transparent excuse to read one's own views into the Constitution? Is the idea of an unwritten constitution democratic or undemocratic? Through a careful reading of Amar, and some of his important critics and allies, we will probe different ways of thinking about the Supreme Law of the Land.

Before the 1990s, the world saw only occasional, discrete war crimes trials after major-power cataclysms. In the last two decades, trials expanded dramatically in number, scope, and philosophy. Separate Ad Hoc Tribunals for crimes in Yugoslavia and those in Rwanda, in Sierra Leone and in Cambodia are giving way to a permanent International Criminal Court, which has begun to hand down indictments and refine its jurisdiction. The UN Security Council, alongside national governments, decides on legitimacy and punishment. At the same time, worries about residual impunity or the effect that punishment might have on societies’ futures has led to the development of national and social courts, as well as national military tribunals, to complement those at the international level. Meanwhile, national activists look to international apologies and reparations for models of what to demand. Examples of internationalized transitional justice abound. This research seminar examines the intent, process, meaning and consequence of these new practices, particularly in terms of national constitutions, international law, and principles of justice.
